Introduction

Bhuri Singh Museum Chamba has rich collections of manuscripts and historical documents. These works supply missing links of historical and cultural importance for furtherance of our knowledge. Manuscripts were stored by pandits, temples and scholars etc. since time immemorial. Even today, there are some families of Pandits who boast of a very rich and varied collection of rare and important manuscripts preserved through generations. Documents belong to the States archive of Chamba covering the period from the middle of the 17th to the 19th century. These documents are the important source of the political and social history and provide the valuable information regarding the relation with the imperial rulers and neighbouring area.

Bhuri Singh museum Chamba has 186 hand written manuscripts in its collection mostly from the Chamba town. There are only few manuscripts which are complete otherwise most of manuscripts are in the form loose folios. The most of the manuscripts are written on paper. The common view is that the use of paper as a writing material became popular in India only during the period of the Muslim rulers. According to Dr. Harman Goetz the paper was introduced in Chamba in the 17th century during the reign of Raja Prithvi Singh who was contemporary of Emperor Shah Jahan. However no manuscript of Raja Prithvi Singh period survived because Raja Ugar Singh of Chamba had set fire to the wooden Chamba town in the wake of arrival of the lawful heir of the throne from Lahore. This devastating fire engulfed the rich cultural heritage including the valuable manuscripts and archival records.

Manuscripts in Chamba are in hand made cream colour paper known as Sialkoti paper. These are mainly in Devanagri, Persian, Bhoti, Takari script . The ink used to write the manuscript was prepared from black soot, procured from mustered oil lamp. The pandit used to sit in the “VIR ASANA” posture in the ‘BHI’(outer verandah) of his house after doing his daily ablutions and place before him paper, ink and pen box. He used to touch his forehead with the handmade kalam and utter the words ‘OM NAMO SIDHAM’ when the manuscript was complete, he used to write thus:

^^ ;kn`'ka iqLrdsa n`"Ve~

rkn`'ka fyf[kre~ e;kA

;fn "kq}e'kqna ok]

In the old Chamba it was mostly the copying work. The work of writing a manuscript was commenced on an auspicious day and it was suspended during mourning. When a manuscript had long since been in disuse, it was immersed into the river. Every Brahmin household followed the pursuit of writing a manuscript. These Brahmin families trace their descent from Jammu and Kashmir. These Brahmin families were well versed in Jyotish, Karmakanda, Tantra and Ayurveda. The prominent manuscript writers of Chamba were Chun Punan, Manganu, Agya Ram Dyod and Mirchu Padha. The important manuscript in the museum collection is that of Jalandhar Pith Dipika dealing with the geography of the holy places of Kangra region. However museum has also acquired few manuscripts from other parts of the state.

The museum possesses a vast and interesting collection of state papers, agreements, sanads, declarations and decrees. These documents are in Persian, Takri, Gurumukhi and Nagari script. These documents represent the ancient archives of Chamba. Letters from the Mughals and Durranis are in the form of sanads and firmans, written in Persian, they either confer on Raja certain lands and areas or pass judgment on disputed territories between the two states. Earliest in date is firman of 1058 A.H.(1640 A.D.) in which a boundary dispute between Raja Prithvi Singh of Chamba and his neighbour Raja Sangram Pal of Basholi is settled in favour of the former by the imperial delegates of Shah Jahan. A Royal sanad in Persian, issued under the seal of Timur Shah and addressed to Raja Raj Singh of Chamba (A.D. 1764-1794), in answer to a letter in which the Raja had offered his services to the king and invited him to visit the country. In his reply the king praises the rulers of Chamba for their devotion to him and his father nestled in paradise, and promises that, when time allows he will accept the Raja's invitation. Another letter from Amar Singh Thapa and Ranjour Singh, general of Gurkha forces who attacked Kangra in 1804-09 are interesting and full of details of varied nature. Another interesting agreement records a treaty between Chamba, Kullu and Bhanghal to attack Raja Sansar Chand of Kangra. Another letter in Takari from Raja Pritam Singh of Kulu to Raja Raj Singh of Chamba affirming the ancient amity and friendship between the two States and promising mutual help in case of attack.

Order under the seal of Muhammad Hayat Khan, an Imperial officer, in the reign of Muhammad Shah, to the zamindars, qanungos, muqaddams and cultivators of the Pathyar pargana. It states that the jagir of Pathyar worth 380,000 dams (i.e., Rs. 9,500) was for a long time in the possession of the Raja of Chamba, but the Katoch seized it and brought under their control. As Raja Diler (Dalel) Singh of Chamba had always been faithful to the Emperor, to whom the pargana of right belongs and as Udai Singh, his elder brother, had held high rank and also the ilqas of Dun and Nadaun in jagir—therefore the above-mentioned pargana (Pathyar) is confirmed to Diler Singh, and the zamindars are enjoined to look up to him as Jagirdar, and to render all due service. It is dated 11th Muharram in the 28th year of Muhammad Shah's reign. As Muhammad Shah's accession took place on the 25th of Zul-qa'da A.H. 1181, the date of the document is the 11th Muharram, A.H. 1159, corresponding to 23rd January, 1746 A.D.

Letter in Persian from Raja Raj Singh to the Sikhs in which the following requests are made: (1)That the pargana of Jundh should be restored to him after the rainy season as agreed upon.(2)That if any complaints are made by the Hazari people of Kangra, they should not be attended to. The Raja adds that in the month of Baisakh he will deal with them according to the writing of the Raja and his officials.(3)That he should be put in possession of one-third of Kulu, as was agreed upon by the Katoches and Mandials. If they refuse, he asks that he may be put in possession through the court of Justice and he will pay the revenue to the Khalsa. As he has placed himself under the protection of the Khalsa he is hopeful of greater favours. If Dugar (i.e., Jammu)causes any trouble, he will inflict due punishment and defend his country in such away that the world will be astonished.

The Hazaris were artillery officers appointed by the king of Delhi to the various gates of theKangra Fort. They took service under Sansar Chand after he had obtained possession of the Fort. There existed in the town of Kangra aHaveli Hazarian which was destroyed in the earthquake of Kangra a Haveli Hazarian which was destroyed in the earthquake of 4th April 1905. the document has ahand-mark in saffron and a seal in Gur-mukhii which reads:Akal sahahi Gurbakhas si[n]gh. Letter in Persian sating that the writer (probably Shah Zaman of Kabul) had marched form Lahore to Qandahar and thence to Kabul. On the way he had seized and put in prison one Shahzada Piru-d-din; and Jit Singh is enjoined to give no shelter to any disloyal people who may take refuge in the Hills. A similar order has been sent to the other Hill Rajas. The letter is not dated ,but it mentions that the king had reached Kabul on the 17th of Muharram, probably of the year A.H.1212. Shahzada Piru-d-din is perhaps the king's brother Prince Mahmud, whose rebellion compelled him to return to Afghanistan. The letter bears the seal of Hafiz Sher Muhammad and was delivered by Shaikh Asalat Khan.
